To Whom it may concern:

It was the little things that impressed us most about Jeff Folino. We checked Jeffrey/Angelo Construction Company out quite extensively prior to signing contracts so we knew about his "Jeffrey Built" reputation of quality workmanship. He certainly lived up to this distinction.

However, when he visited our house after the project was complete every day for nearly a week going over the minor but annoying imperfections that all new houses are bound to have but few builders take the time to correct, we knew the job was complete in every sense of the word. The final touch-up of paint after the furniture was moved in, the caulking of pinholes in our screened porch, the adjusting of doorknobs to make sure all doors closed tight, I can go on and on.

Detailed craftsmanship is evident throughout my waterfront home and the view, which was a major concern in the construction plans, is spectacular. We welcome anyone who is considering Jeffrey-Angelo to build their home to give us a call with any specific questions they may have. Without exception, Jeff's sub-contractors were an extension of his professionalism and pride in a job well done. My architect was a huge disappointment, so much so that after the plans were drawn up we never heard from him. Not a problem, Jeff acted as architect/builder combined suggesting several changes to the original plans, which worked out extremely well.

As this was our second custom built home we learned much the hard way the first time. We promised ourselves that this time we were going to do everything perfect. A tall order for most builders but not Jeff. We soon learned the roller coaster ride was over and it was smooth sailing to the house of our dreams. Our sincere thanks go to Jeff and his wife, Laura, who was an enormous help throughout the project. They've made what was a mere vision a year ago into a reality today.

Sincerely,

Gary and Pat Weindorf
